WUNDER

When I heard from a fellow winegrower that this vineyard was for sale, I could hardly believe it. A steep, south-east facing site with old, deeply rooted vines and a view of the Rosengarten, a unique location. I had to act quickly, as there was, of course, a lot of interest. The wait for a possible commitment seemed endless. When I finally got the go-ahead from the owner, it felt almost like a miracle. It may sound ironic, but I later learned in passing that this farm was historically called Wunder, the German for miracle!

At first, I didn't realize that so much manual work had gone into this steep site. When I tasted the first wines, however, I immediately realised that all that painstaking work had undoubtedly been worth it.

Despite the steep location and all of the effort involved, the breathtaking view of one of the most famous mountain massifs in the Dolomites, the Rosengarten/Catinaccio, makes it the most beautiful workplace in the world for me.

Weinmaker note:

*“A new expression of an exceptional terroir
Embodying this special location in a glass is the greatest challenge for me.”*
